

In-Home Aide Services

In-Home Aide Services assists elderly and disabled adults with attaining and maintaining self-sufficiency and improving quality of life. In-Home Aide Services have Community Social Service Assistants (CSSA) who perform home management tasks such as cooking, cleaning, laundry, and shopping to enable adults to remain and function effectively in their own homes as long as possible. The target population consists of individuals who are unable to carry out tasks essential to the activities of daily living or who need the service in order to remain in their own homes. Services are often provided to remedy and/or prevent neglect, abuse, or exploitation, and unnecessary out of home placement. In-Home Aide Services are designed to provide assistance, not to replace the family in carrying out their responsibilities to individuals needing care and support. Clients who are not on Medicaid are given priority. These individuals make too much money to be eligible for Medicaid, which can pay for certain in-home services, but not enough to privately pay for assistance and are at risk of placement.
